Why Every Day is a "Special Sale Day" Here

Now, what is a "special sale" but the selling of merchandise at unusually low prices? Other houses do it now and then—we do it every day. Here's why: We buy in the largest quantities, direct from the makers, and thereby secure prices and discounts impossible to ordinary stores. And we aim at largest sales by figuring at the smallest margin of profit. Consider all these facts and you can readily see how we can sell every day at prices that, elsewhere, would be "Special Sale Day" figures.
